The Wesley Temple A.M.E. Zion Church is a Neo-Classical Revival style building, located adjacent to a public park north of Akron's downtown commercial district. Completed in 1928, the church is rectangular in plan and rests on a raised brick foundation. The steel frame walls are faced with red brick laid in a common bond pattern and set off from the foundation brick by a stone water table. The raised three-bay front entrance features classical door surrounds and entablatures; the doorways are flanked by two small rectangular windows with stone lintels and brick sills. A classical pedimented portico, with a broad cornice, modillions, and a large cartouche of cornucopias, is supported by four Ionic columns. Tall, round-arched, stained glass windows on the side facades have brick sills and stone keystones. The corners of the building are distinguished by brick quoins and small octagonal windows with brick and stone trim. A simple stone cornice is surmounted by a brick parapet capped with stone.

The lower sanctuary, in the basement, is arranged on a modified Akron Plan, with three Sunday School rooms on each side of the sanctuary. The main sanctuary is also almost entirely original, with classical door surrounds, six-panel doors, fluted pilasters, prominent coved crown moldings, a balcony facing the altar, and original pews, lighting fixtures, and pipe organ.

The only major alteration to the church was the construction of an addition to the rear of the building in 1963. This addition is compatible in design, scale, and materials, but is distinguishable from the earlier building by a slightly lighter color of brick. The only other notable changes occurred about 1980, when the center front door was converted to a window, without affecting the classical surround and entablature, and the deteriorated portico columns were replaced with exact copies of the originals. In all other respects, the church remains essentially as built, exhibiting a high state of architectural integrity.
The Wesley Temple A.M.E. Zion Church is significant, under Criterion A, for its association with African-American history in the city of Akron. In addition to their religious functions, black churches played primary roles as educational, social, and cultural institutions, maintaining and perpetuating black families and African-American culture in the face of prolonged and systematic racial discrimination.

Akron was founded in 1825, and had few black inhabitants in its early years. The black population began to grow in the decade preceding the Civil War, but the 1860 census still showed only 24 black residents. Akron became a city in 1865, and the need for unity and spiritual strength led to the formation of the city's first black congregation, A.M.E. Zion Church, in 1866, as blacks were still excluded from most white churches and faced limited educational and economic opportunities. Meetings were held in private homes and halls until a lot was purchased and a small building erected on S. High Street in 1882. As Akron's black population increased (to 278 by 1880) several other black congregations were founded in the 1880s.

Black churches in the late 19th and early 20th centuries were critically important for helping preserve family unity and as institutions providing an educational setting for families and black organizations, as well as lecture halls for orators. The church was one of the strongest black institutions, meeting spiritual as well as some social and educational needs (McClain:107). By 1900 Akron's population of 42,728 included 525 blacks. "Although the black population remained small, blacks nevertheless continued to be conscious of their particular needs in a society which had not absorbed them, nor considered them as equals." (McClain:112). However, in the years between 1900 and 1920, rapid industrial growth tied to the expansion of the rubber industry led to a tripling of Akron's population, including an influx of southern blacks; the city's black population increased eight-fold, from 657 to 5,580. This growth also brought increasing racial hostility and discrimination. Blacks were prevented from living in the "better" residential sections, and most blacks were employed in menial capacities, regardless of education or abilities. Blacks pursuing higher education were forced to attend black colleges such as Wilberforce, and it wasn't until 1921 that the University of Akron produced its first black graduate, Emmer Lancaster (a member of A.M.E. Zion). Lancaster received his law degree in 1927, co-founded the Summit County Colored Democratic Club in 1928, and served as a local president of the NAACP. The local chapter of the NAACP was organized at the A.M.E. Zion Church, and its first president was Rev. James H. McMullen of the church. Other prominent members of the congregation included George Mathews, Akron's first black hotel owner; the first black city council member, Edward Davis; the first black Akron School Board member, the Rev. Dr. Eugene Morgan; and Akron's most prominent black businesswoman, Mary Upperman, wife of A.M.E. Zion's Rev. L.N. Upperman - Mrs. Upperman owned and managed one of Akron's largest "Negro" grocery stores, conducted an employment bureau, operated a laundry and a rooming house, and eventually became sole proprietor of the only "colored" drug store in Akron at that time, the Globe Drug Store. (More recent prominent members include Judge James R. Williams, appointed as an attorney-general by President Carter; Thaddeus Garrett, Jr., the first appointed black Congressional page, who was designated as Special Assistant for Urban Affairs by Vice-President Rockefeller; and Shelton Lee, Jr., the first black appointee to the U.S. Naval Academy).

A.M.E. Zion, along with other black churches, continued to grow in the 1920s. The need for a larger building led to the drawing of plans in 1926, the hiring of a black contractor, and the dedication of the newly completed church, named the Wesley Temple A.M.E. Zion Church, on August 12, 1928. The church continued to serve not only as a place of worship, but also as a meeting place for other black organizations and as a lecture hall for black orators. As the Depression deepened in the 1930s, blacks were hit harder than any other group in the city. According to the Federal Relief Administration (cited in McClain) blacks were the first to be laid off and the last hired, and 20% of the city's black population was on relief, although they comprised only 4% of the total population. Black churches were instrumental in helping black families and in providing educational, religious, and social programs. "Suffering under the double handicap of being black and poor, Negro residents continued to face the unenviable task of motivating their children to remain in school and complete their education. Black churches, speakers, and organizations maintained their supportive role of aiding black families in meeting that challenge." (McClain:246). A.M.E. Zion Church also became the principal location for feeding unemployed blacks throughout the Depression. From the days before the Civil War, when churches were the only organized social outlet available to slaves, up to the present time, the church has been the single most important institution in the lives of African-Americans. Racial barriers—political, economic, and social—under which black Americans lived, contributed to the growth of black consciousness and culture, particularly in social organizations and the churches. Churches served dual roles, as both religious institutions and social outlets, implementing activities that strengthened families, instilled a greater sense of black pride, and fostered a tradition of self-help and unity in the face of pervasive discrimination. As focal points of the black community, churches helped maintain and pass on black culture through worship, music, singing, readings, speeches, dinners, meetings, and other events. Wesley Temple A.M.E. Zion Church, representing the oldest black congregation in Akron, has always been prominent among the city's black churches in fulfilling these various roles and responsibilities, partially reflected in the fact that many of Akron's most distinguished and successful African-Americans have been members of this church; it is significant as a leading exemplar of the vital role churches have played in the heritage of Akron's African-American community.

The African Methodist Episcopal Zion (A.M.E. Zion) Church is the second oldest Black denomination in the United States. Rather than endure discrimination and prejudice at the hands of the John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, black leaders withdrew and founded the A.M.E. Zion Church in 1796. Today the A.M.E. Zion Church is the second largest Black Methodist body in the United States.

The period of significance extends from 1928, when the church building was dedicated, to 1943, the fifty-year cutoff for National Register significance.
