The Frank Mason Raymond House is a 2 1/2 story, 20-room building completed in 1929 and located on the western edge of Turkeyfoot Lake, south of the city of Akron. Designed in the Tudor Revival style, the house was constructed of brick laid in Flemish bond pattern, with decorative half-timbering and stucco infill above portions of the first floor. Casement windows are clustered in groups of two to five, and the projecting front entry is framed in ornamental stonework. Decorative courses of brickwork in a diamond pattern are found at several exterior locations, and three massive chimneys of stone and brick are capped by individual chimney pots. The house's design incorporates a gabled slate roof with prominent cross gables and several small, hip-roof wall dormers.

The interior of the house is also largely intact. Arched doorways and built-in china cabinets, a carved wood staircase, a Tudor arch fireplace with oak paneling, and exposed beams in the living room, all enhance the overall architectural design. The kitchen still retains a butler's pantry and a servant call box; original tilework, pedestal sink, and other fittings remain in the bathroom; and the bedroom closets still exhibit their original built-in drawers and shelving.

The spacious setting of the Raymond House includes an embanked grotto constructed of stone just north of the house, a tennis court, and a small wood two-bay garage (built ca. 1948) with a front gable roof and a single 6/6 double-hung window on each side. The house, grotto, tennis court are all contributing resources. The garage is non-contributing due to age.
The Frank M. Raymond House is significant under Criterion C as a distinctive example of the Tudor Revival style of architecture, exhibiting most of the defining elements of that style.

Completed in 1929, this house's asymmetrical plan, Flemish bond brick construction, decorative half-timbering above the first floor, gabled front entry with stone trim, and massive stone and brick chimneys with separate chimney pots, are the major design elements that distinguish the Tudor Revival style. The grouped casement windows, copper gutters, and slate roof with prominent cross gables further exemplify the Tudor Revival design of this house. The interior also reflects Tudor design in its arched doorways, carved wood staircase, prominent Tudor arch fireplace with oak paneling, and exposed beams in the living room.

The Frank Mason Raymond house was constructed and given to Raymond as a wedding present from his grandfather, Frank Mason, who was a senior executive of the B.F. Goodrich Company and had his large summer mansion adjacent to this house. Raymond served as vice-president of his father's firm, Akron Specialty Manufacturing Co., and his wife was the daughter of Byron Robinson, president of Robinson Clay Products. The house was sold in 1943 to locally prominent jeweler Henry B. Ball, who resided there until 1968, when Robert Fabbro's family purchased it. The Ohio Department of Natural Resources, which had purchased most of Frank Mason's Brighton Farm estate to form the Portage Lakes State Park in 1954, bought the Raymond house in 1974. Since 1977, the house has been leased to and operated by Franklin Township as a civic center.

The Akron architectural firm of Albert H. Good and Edwin D. Wagner, who designed the house, were already known as architects for many of the city's elite, having designed the Portage Lakes Country Club in 1922. Their best-known commission was probably Akron's Art-Deco Y.M.C.A., completed in 1930 and now listed on the National Register.
