The Ohio and Erie Canal was constructed in the early 1800s. It connected to the Cuyahoga River in Cuyahoga County and traveled all the way down to the Ohio River in Scioto County, Ohio. From the 1820s the canal was used for freight traffic but by the 1860s canal transport rapidly declined due to the construction of railroads. From the 1860s until 1913, the canal also served as a water source to industries and towns. After what was known as, “The Great Flood of 1913,” much of the Ohio Canal system was destroyed and eventually abandoned.

Since Congress created the Ohio and Erie Canal National Heritage Corridor in 1996, the Ohio and Erie Canal Association (OECA) has acted as the management entity for the heritage area. Referred to as the Ohio and Erie Canalway, most of the remaining portions are maintained by the National Park Service and the Ohio Department of Natural Resources. Preservation efforts of the historic properties along the Canalway have been successful through a combination of programs offered by government and not-for profit organizations and strong private sector support for the properties. Numerous historical societies in the area and preservation leaders, in addition to technical assistance from the Cuyahoga Valley National Park staff have leveraged public interest in developing this recreational area.
